I. FACTS OR DATA CONSIDERED IN FORMING THE OPINIONS STATED BELOW

1. All electronic mail messages received by ZooBuh's mail servers that are at issue in this litigation.
2. 15 U.S.C. 7701 et seq. (the CAN-SPAM Act).
3. National Cyber Alert System, Cyber Security Tip ST04-007.

II. EXPERTISE/EXPERIENCE

I have been in the computer field for over 30 years. I have been directly involved in email communication systems and infrastructure since 1996. I have created proprietary email systems specifically to facilitate alternative services such as customized filtering and implementation and modification of open-source products. I have configured and maintained various Mail Transfer Agent ("MTA") mailers such as Microsoft Exchange, Qmail and Postfix. I have extensive knowledge of Spamassassin, which is a popular anti-SPAM tool that interfaces with many types of MTAs. I have also developed various email filtering programs that interface with Postfix, PHP and MySQL.

My knowledge of networks and network protocols along with my knowledge of server management and maintenance qualifies me as an expert in this field.

III. SCOPE OF OPINION

I was asked to opine regarding the following topics: History of Email Communication; Technology of Email Communication; Email Safety Practices and Standards; Common Spamming Practices; Better Broadcasting's Email Practices.

I am not being paid for the work that I do on behalf of the Plaintiff in this case.

IV. OPINION

HISTORY OF EMAIL COMMUNICATION

1. Electronic mail (E-Mail) was originally designed for 7-bit American Standard Code for Information Interchange ("ASCII") text only. ASCII is a character scheme based on the US English alphabet. The letters include upper and lower case alphabet, numbers and symbols found on a typical US computer keyboard. Since email predates the inception of the Internet, a text only format was used. These emails were sent as early as the 1970s.

2. Hyper Text Markup Language (“HTML”) did not come about until the early 1990s. HTML allows a message to specify font families, sizes, colors, and to have italic, underline or bold letters.

3. Over time, the need to send attached files became necessary, thus resulting in a process we now know as Multipurpose Internet Mail Extensions (“MIME”). MIME enabled the use of extended character sets and the ability to encode binary data (e.g., attachments) with the use of base64. Base64 converts binary data into an ASCII/text-only alternative in order to transmit the email and have it be decoded by the recipient’s email client.

4. Most modern graphical email clients can display either plain text or HTML for the message body, usually at the option of the recipient. Although HTML emails can include a text copy, it is not required for the successful transmission of email.

5. There are advantages of using HTML such as font sizes, colors, italics, underlines and bold text. However, some disadvantages include increased size of the email, and more importantly, privacy concerns such as image tracking, web bugs, and phishing schemes.

TECHNOLOGY OF EMAIL COMMUNICATION

6. There are three components to an email; the Envelope, Header, and Body. The Envelope is not relevant for this opinion. The Header and Body are the two parts of email relevant to this opinion.

EMAIL HEADER

7. In simple terms, the Header is the first part of the message. (an example of a Header is attached here to as Exhibit “A”). It is not displayed to the user by default. However any email client will allow the recipient to view the full header.

8. The Header includes several identifying lines such as “From”, “To, cc”, “Date”, “Subject.”

9. The “From” includes the sender’s email address and optionally the sender’s name. This lets the recipient know who sent the message. There is no real check on this name and it can be set to any data by the emailer. If there is no “return-to” header and/or if the recipient does not exist on the receiving system, the server will look at the “From” line to bounce the message back. Falsified addresses will bounce back to bad address and can play “ping-pong” (depending on configurations) between the two servers, thereby causing harm to the servers.

10. The “To, Cc” identifies the recipient’s email address and name. Multiple addresses are separated by commas. Bcc addresses will not be shown as they are “Blind Carbon Copies.” Each recipient email address will be in one of these fields.

11. The “Date” is set by the sender’s email client. The date is typically not checked for accuracy, however, SPAM checkers such as Spamassassin can determine if it was sent in the future or in the past (day old bread) based on the attached time zone in the RFC2822¹ date.

12. The “Subject” line provides a summary of the content of the email, but can contain any information input by the sender.

13. The Header also includes routing lines that indicate when and where the email was handled, and by what server. It is time stamped by the Mail Transfer Agent (“MTA”) indicating that the message routed, or relayed off the server.

14. Emails can take different routes, bouncing and relaying off different servers to arrive at the intended destination. MTA servers facilitate these transfers. Each time the email relays off a server, a “Received” tag is added to the Header.

15. The Header can facilitate custom fields as well including, but not limited to, the “Hostname” and “IP Address” of the various mail servers along with “Date Stamps”, “SPF Reports” (used for a SPAM analysis), “SPAM Summaries”, etc.

Headers are crucial in determining the origination and tracking path of the message.

16. The Header has distinct roles related to the identification of the initiating party (the party who transmitted the email message) that are completely unrelated to what may or may not exist in the email Body.

17. For example, each header contains a received line designed for debugging/tracing the path of the message and for tracking down slow relays that affect deliverability. The received lines can serve as three main components in a review of where the message has been:

- a. first, it can identify where the message originated from and if the server is authorized to handle distribution of the domain;
- b. second, it identifies the receiving/destination server—the last server to handle the data; and
- c. third, it can be used to chart the path of the message—each server, in between, that has relayed or forwarded the message.

18. The “From” line in each message may include a designated sender name and always includes an originating email address. This information is set by the emailer and can be forged and/or falsified without any trouble. There is no verification of its validity, so steps such as SPF records (utilized by SPAM filters to identify offending email) were created to try and combat the false information.

19. The recipient mail server does initial evaluations based on the Header information to determine the legitimacy of the sending server. The server will examine the information in an attempt to identify whether the message is legitimate or some sort of attack. SPAM filters will take the analysis a step further and identify specific characteristics and information in order to determine if the email is SPAM.

20. When a Header contains false information, the recipient mail server is unable to identify the actual source of the message, or will identify the source as something other than what it actually is (i.e. a “spoof”), thereby preventing the mail server, the protected computer, and/or the end recipient from identifying the actual point of origination.

21. Further, as a practical matter, the Header serves as a way whereby the recipient can identify the sender and origin without opening the email and potentially exposing the recipient to questionable content and/or potentially exposing the recipient computer to security threats (i.e. viruses, Trojans, malware, etc.).

EMAIL BODY

22. The body of an email message can be drafted as text only, HTML, or both by using the MIME protocol.

Text Only Emails

23. Email bodies can be drafted as text only and are 7 bit ASCII. Text emails are “plain text”, which means there is no formatting, such as fonts, sizes, colors. Every email client, even one with the most strict security settings, should be capable of reading text emails.

24. Email clients that are only capable of reading text, or email clients that are only configured to read text, will not read and display HTML. (See infra).

25. Text emails are the smallest form of email and the easiest for a receiving mail client to process. This fact is commonly known in the industry.

HTML Emails

26. The body of an email messages can also be drafted as HTML. HTML allows a message to specify font families, sizes, colors, and to have italic, underline or bold letters.

27. An email has to specify to the email client that it is using an alternative/additional format (i.e. MIME, discussed infra), otherwise the email client will display the message as plain text and will look like you “viewed the source” of a webpage, which will be illegible to the recipient. (an example of this is provided herewith as Exhibit “B”).

28. Email clients that are configured to read HTML will also read and display text, as HTML capable email clients are capable of reading and displaying simple text.

29. In contrast, an email message that only includes an HTML part will only be read by an email client that is both capable of reading HTML and configured to read HTML. This is because email clients that are only capable of reading text, or email clients that are only configured to read text, will not read and display HTML. This fact is commonly known in the industry.

MIME Emails

30. MIME is an Internet standard that extends the format of email to support message bodies with multiple parts. MIME is specified in six linked RFC memoranda: RFC 2045, RFC 2046, RFC 2047, RFC 4288, RFC 4289 and RFC 2049.²

² In order for computer to computer communication to work, standards are created and maintained. The RFC protocols together define email specifications for all Internet users. The Internet Engineering Task Force (“IETF”) codifies standardizing decisions which are then published in Request for Comments (“RFC”). Many RFCs are the standards on which the Internet is formed. By way of example, the Internet Email RFC standards include: RFC 2049, which defines a message representation protocol specifying considerable detail about US-ASCII message headers, and leaves the message content, or message body, as flat US-ASCII text. This set of documents, collectively called the MIME, redefines the format of messages to allow for: (1) textual message bodies in character sets other than US-ASCII; (2) an extensible set of different formats for non-textual message bodies; (3) multi-part message bodies, and (4) textual header information in character sets other than US-ASCII.

31. Since MIME extends the format of email to support message bodies with multiple parts, MIME allows email to be drafted in a manner that the email can be read in more than one format. For example, using the MIME protocol, an email can be drafted to have a text part, a HTML part, or both. MIME also allows the emailer to include images as part of the message.

32. There are three main types of images that can be included within an email: “Attached”; “Inline”; and “Remote.”

33. Attached: images (and other files) can be attached to a message which typically requires the end-user to click on an icon to open them up to view or download.

34. Inline Attached: these types of images are inline with the content of the body. They can either be positioned on the page with text flowing around, or just sequentially one after another. The image data is part of the email, encoded with base64, and referenced with a content ID (“CID#”). A common purpose of this method is to have an article, newspaper, magazine type content within the email.

35. Remote: these images are not part of the email body, but rather a link to a web server that could be anywhere on the Internet and controlled by any unknown third party. Many email clients, such as Outlook, ZooBuh, and Google, will warn the user that there is remote content and require the user to click and accept before the images are downloaded. This is a standard security measure. Remote images are considered a security threat because they require additional connections from the recipient’s computer to an offsite server. The images also allow a recipient to be tracked if the image is viewed.

36. Remote images are not permanent. If the remote image no longer exists on the remote server (the file was moved, deleted, etc. by the third party in control of the server) then the image will not be downloaded to the email client and can never be viewed by the recipient.

37. Remotely hosted images typically do not have a very long shelf-life. This means there is a small window of time where the image is viewable. There are many reasons for this, including but not limited to: (1) the emailer violated the Terms and Conditions of the ISP (i.e., spamming. Most ISPs policies include provisions against spamming, such as Moniker, GoDaddy, Name Cheap, Network Solutions, etc.); (2) the allocated bandwidth amount has been exceeded (when an emailer sets up a remote server with a hosting company, there is usually a bandwidth limit set. When a spam campaign is initiated, hundreds of millions of emails may be sent out. Each recipient that opens the image(s) counts against this bandwidth. If the bandwidth is exceeded, the image will no longer be available to subsequent viewers); (3) The file has been deleted or removed (there are many reasons this may happen. Whatever the case, the image will no longer be available on the server and the recipient will never be able to view it).

Summary

38. An email message sent in MIME with only a text part should be displayed by legitimate email clients. This is because email clients that are configured to read HTML will also read and display text, as HTML capable email clients are capable of reading and displaying simple text.

39. In contrast, an email message that only includes an HTML part will only be read by an email client that is both capable of reading HTML and configured to read HTML. This is because email clients that are only capable of reading text, or email clients that are only configured to read text, will not read and display HTML.

40. If an email is drafted using the MIME protocol to include both a text part and an HTML part, the email will be readable as a text message or as rendered HTML. However, if the email is drafted to only have an HTML part, then anyone who receives the email who is not set up to read HTML messages will not be able to read the email.

41. Thus, anyone who sends a multi-part message using the MIME protocol and does not include the text version of the email should expect that the recipient may not be able to see the content included in the email. Indeed, when an email is drafted in HTML format, many email clients are configured to warn the author of an email that the recipient may not be able to read the message as a result of the HTML format.

42. The result of the choice to send emails where the content is HTML or remotely hosted is that any recipient of the email who uses an email client that is not capable of rendering HTML code will not be able to see any information in the HTML part of the email body. This is a fact that is commonly known in the industry.

43. Additionally, any recipient of the email who has an email client capable of rendering HTML code but who has turned that functionality off (whether for preference or because of potential security threats) will also not be able to see any of the content provided in the HTML part of the email body.

GENERAL EMAIL SAFETY PRACTICES FOR EMAIL RECIPIENTS

44. The United States Department of Homeland Security (DHS) through the United States Computer Emergency Readiness Team (“US-CERT”) is charged with providing response support and defense against cyber attacks for the Federal Civil Executive Branch and with information sharing and collaboration with state and local government, industry and international partners.

45. US-CERT interacts with federal agencies, industry, the research community, state and local governments, and others to disseminate reasoned and actionable cyber security information to the public.

46. US-CERT has repeatedly warned against downloading remotely hosted images in email.

47. In the National Cyber Alert System, Cyber Security Tip ST04-007, US-CERT advised as follows: “Disable the automatic downloading of graphics in HTML mail – Many spammers send HTML mail with a linked graphic file that is then used to track who opens the mail message—when your mail client downloads the graphic from their web server, they know you’ve opened the message. Disabling HTML mail entirely and viewing messages in plain text also prevents this problem.” (National Cyber Alert System, Cyber Security Tip ST04-007, 2, attached hereto as Exhibit “C”).

48. If the spammer knows the email has been opened, they have confirmed the legitimacy of the email address, as most spam is directed towards dictionary lists. The spammer then has the ability to distribute the email address as a confirmed address which makes it more valuable.

49. In the document entitled Recognizing and Avoiding Email Scams, US-Cert again warns “[t]here are a number of ways you can configure your email client to make you less susceptible to email scams. For instance, configuring your email program to view email as ‘text only’ will help protect you from scams that misuse HTML in email.” (Recognizing and Avoiding Email Scams, 8, attached hereto as Exhibit “D”).

50. Industry also warns of rendering HTML in email messages. In the document entitled Technical and Policy Requirements for Sending Email to AOL, AOL warns emailers that they will not support many of the features of HTML. (See Technical and Policy Requirements for Sending Email to AOL, attached hereto as Exhibit “E”).

51. AOL also states that “[o]ne reason [the client does not support all features of HTML] is because of the security hazards involved with sending HTML e-mails. These e-mails can expose the unwary user to hostile viruses or other intrusive programs. . . . The common theme here is end-user security. Malicious e-mailers can bury a wide variety of harmful actions within the HTML e-mail, including programs that activate upon download.” Id. at 2-3.

COMMON SPAMMING PRACTICES

52. Spammers engage in various practices designed to (1) conceal the actual sender from the recipient (2) avoid SPAM filtering technology; (3) induce the recipient to open the email; (4) track the recipient email address and verify its validity; and (5) potentially harm the recipient or the recipient’s computer.

53. Spammer will use generic emails address and “From” names in the email Headers. Email spammers will often use false names and email addresses, sometimes randomly generated, so the recipient will not know who really sent the email. Further, using false and generic names will often evade spam filters designed to identify know spammer “From” names and email addresses.

54. Spammers will register hundreds, if not thousands, of “.info” domain names from which to send countless email. The “.info” domains are considerable cheaper than “.net”, “.com”, or “.org” domains. At the time of this writing, GoDaddy is registering “.info” domains for $2.99 USD or free if purchased with a “.com” domain name. In contrast, “.com” names cost $12.99 USD, “.net” names cost $9.99 USD, and “.org” names cost $6.99 USD. In the likely event that the domain used in the “From” line gets blacklisted or suspended, the messages have already been sent out and at minimal investment. Further, spammers generally do not have any intention of renewing a “.info” domain as it would be more expensive than obtaining new names. Further, after a spam campaign, a domain is likely blacklisted and the receipt of the message by the recipient would be blocked. Also, new names benefit the spammer as the name is new and has not been blacklisted in RBL (Registered Black List) lookups.

55. Spammers will set fake “dates” in the emails. Email spammers often attempt to set this date in an effort to place the email at the top of the recipient’s inbox, as most email clients sort by date.

56. Spammers will use “Subject” lines to induce the recipient into opening the email. Common practices include: identifying the recipient by name; stating that the recipient is a winner or has obtained something for free; using the “re” or “fwd” designations to make the recipient believe the email is a response or coming from a trusted emailer.

57. Spammers use remotely hosted images to track and confirm legitimate email addresses. A common use of a Remote Image would be: `` where the “abc123” is a unique identifier that is associated with the recipient’s email address. If the recipient were to open the message and view the image, the spammer would be able to confirm that the email address is authentic. Additionally, it is very common for email spammers to include, in remotely hosted images, the language that identifies the ability to unsubscribe from future messages, an advertisement notice, or the identification of contact information for the emailer. Concealing the content from the recipient in a remote image often times prevents the recipient from unsubscribing from future messages or successfully identifying the emailer.

58. Spammers use “Bayes Poisoning” to evade SPAM filters. Bayesian filtering in SPAM is a method to help determine if a message is SPAM. It uses tokens or words, comparing with legitimate messages, to calculate a probability that an email is or is not SPAM. When using HTML to send messages, it allows for comment lines. Comment lines are encapsulated with `<!--` and `-->`. Anything within these tags is not viewable by the email recipient. However, the SPAM filter does see it. When the SPAM filter scans through the document, it finds hundreds or thousands of random words included in comment lines with the sole purpose of confusing or poisoning the Bayesian filter. The objective is to make the filter think that the message is legitimate by outweighing real words with known spamming words, in an attempt to throw off the ratio. (see infra Exhibit H).

59. Spammers use Dictionary Attacks to generate and discover legitimate email addresses. A Dictionary Attack is a process where a spammer attempts to successfully target an exhaustive list of pre-arranged values. A Dictionary Attack does not indicate words from the typical book such as Webster’s Dictionary, but information on particular subjects or on a particular class of words, names, or facts, usually arranged alphabetically. Although Dictionary Attacks are notably used for attempting passwords, they are also used for usernames in email addresses.

60. Spammers use scripting or other automated processes to discover legitimate email addresses (“Scripting Attacks”). A Scripting Attack is where email addresses (either sender or recipient) are generated using an automated process. The result is a list of sender or recipient email addresses that follow various patterns (e.g. John1@email.com to John9999@email.com). Often times, scripting processes are more sophisticated and instead of using lists, they use words. Viewing the email addresses alphabetically will reveal a pattern of selected words. In some cases, the words will cross various domain names, indicating the same script generated words for multiple domains.

BETTER BROADCASTING’S EMAIL PRACTICES

61. I have reviewed each of the emails in question. Each of the Better Broadcasting emails is designed using HTML or the MIME Protocol.

62. The emails in question are capable of including text, HTML, attached, in-line and remotely hosted images.

63. Each of the emails contains various remotely hosted images. However, text only clients, and clients with security settings that prevent the automatic download of remote images or the rendering of HTML (which is an industry standard practice) will never display this content.

64. Furthermore, the images in the emails appear to have had a short shelf-life and no longer exist on the remotely hosted server. Even clients that are able to view HTML in its entirety would get an “image not found” type of message, or the iconic “X in the box” replacement. Accordingly, the recipient would never see the content of the image.

65. Though the emails provide content in the text part of the email. The emails fail to include any of the content or information required by the CAN-SPAM Act (i.e. advertisement notice, unsubscribe notice, physical address of sender) in this format.

66. The emails contain many common spamming practices.
- a. Generic email addresses. Almost all (13,333) of the emails in question originated from generic or nonsensical email addresses and do not actually identify any party. (list of email addresses attached hereto as Exhibit “F”).
 - b. High concentration of “.info” sender domains. (list of all sender domains attached hereto as Exhibit “G”). The Better Broadcasting emails in this case originated from 13,289 unique sender email addresses. 11,778 of these addresses are “.info” addresses. Given the high number of “.info” addresses, it is my opinion that Better Broadcasting registered each of the domains for spamming purposes only.
 - c. Each email contains the following remotely hosted image: ``. The sub-domain “gaiana” can separate groups within the jiggly-joggly.info domain. Such as geographic location, master lists (where the email was purchased from or obtained), recipient addresses and can be used for purposes of confirming the validity of a recipient email address.
 - d. Bayes Poisoning. A significant number of the Better Broadcasting emails (approximately 60%) also contain significant “Bayes Poisoning.” (Email sample of Bayes Poisoning, attached hereto as Exhibit “H”). The Bayes Poisoning is so severe that, in the case of some of the emails, a printed raw version (a version which displays all text, including hidden white text) would span over 900 printed pages.
 - e. Script Attacks. The sender email addresses from which the Better Broadcasting emails were sent appear to have been generated by some sort of script based on a selection of words. In this case, most of the sender email addresses do not contain an individual’s, company’s or brand’s name, but a random and generic word or nonsensical letter combination. (see Exhibit F). Viewing the sender email addresses alphabetically shows a distinct pattern of selected words. Some words cross domain names, indicating the same script generated words for multiple domains, essentially using the same dictionary file to create these sender email addresses.

CONCLUSION

67. Though the MIME protocol allows Better Broadcasting to provide a text version of the email content, which would be viewable by any recipient, most, if not all, of the messages from Better Broadcasting, have only one line of text that is readable without the use of remotely hosted images.

68. As stated above, most, if not all, of the emails utilize remotely hosted images to provide content to the Body of the email. Again Better Broadcasting should expect that recipients who use text only email clients, who have security setting that block HTML, or who have security settings that block the automatic download of remotely hosted images (which is industry standard) will never see the content of the remotely hosted images. Further, if the remote images are removed from the server for any reason, which seems to be the case here, the recipient will never see the content.

69. In my opinion, the only way to ensure that the recipient will actually see the content of the email Body is by providing it in text. This would not significantly increase the size of the message and would not prohibit the emailer from also providing more attractive advertisements in images or HTML. It would, however, ensure that every recipient sees the content.

70. In summary, Better Broadcasting should expect that any recipient who uses a text only email client, or any recipient who has security settings that block HTML or remotely hosted content (industry standard), would not be able to see the content in the email Body.

Reducing Spam

Security Tip (ST04-007)

Reducing Spam

Original release date: April 21, 2004 | Last revised: July 29, 2009

What is spam?

Spam is the electronic version of "junk mail." The term spam refers to unsolicited, often unwanted, email messages. Spam does not necessarily contain viruses—valid messages from legitimate sources could fall into this category.

Spam is a common, and often frustrating, side effect to having an email account. Although you will probably not be able to eliminate it, there are ways to reduce it.

How can you reduce the amount of spam?

There are some steps you can take to significantly reduce the amount of spam you receive:

- Don't give your email address out arbitrarily - Email addresses have become so common that a space for them is often included on any form that asks for your address—even comment cards at restaurants. It seems harmless, so many people write them in the space provided without realizing what could happen to that information. For example, companies often enter the addresses into a database so that they can keep track of their customers and the customers' preferences. Sometimes these lists are sold to or shared with other companies, and suddenly you are receiving email that you didn't request.
- Check privacy policies - Before submitting your email address online, look for a privacy policy. Most reputable sites will have a link to their privacy policy from any form where you're asked to submit personal data. You should read this policy before submitting your email address or any other personal information so that you know what the owners of the site plan to do with the information (see Protecting Your Privacy for more information).
- Be aware of options selected by default - When you sign up for some online accounts or services, there may be a section that provides you with the option to receive email about other products and services. Sometimes there are options selected by default, so if you do not deselect them, you could begin to receive email from lists those lists as well.
- Use filters - Many email programs offer filtering capabilities that allow you to block certain addresses or to only allow email from addresses on your contact list. Some ISPs offer spam "tagging" or filtering services, but legitimate messages misclassified as spam might be dropped before reaching your inbox. However, many ISPs that offer filtering services also provide options for tagging suspected spam messages so the end user can more easily identify them. This can be useful in conjunction with filtering capabilities provided by many email programs.
- Report messages as spam - Most email clients offer an option to report a message as spam or junk. If your has that option, take advantage of it. Reporting messages as spam or junk helps to train the mail filter so that the messages aren't delivered to your inbox. However, check your junk or spam folders occasionally to look for legitimate messages that were incorrectly classified as spam.
- Don't follow links in spam messages - Some spam relies on generators that try variations of email addresses at certain domains. If you click a link within an email message or reply to a certain address, you are just confirming that your email address is valid. Unwanted messages that offer an "unsubscribe" option are particularly tempting, but this is often just a method for collecting valid addresses that are then sent other spam.

- Disable the automatic downloading of graphics in HTML mail - Many spammers send HTML mail with a linked graphic file that is then used to track who opens the mail message—when your mail client downloads the graphic from their web server, they know you've opened the message. Disabling HTML mail entirely and viewing messages in plain text also prevents this problem.
- Consider opening an additional email account - Many domains offer free email accounts. If you frequently submit your email address (for online shopping, signing up for services, or including it on something like a comment card), you may want to have a secondary email account to protect your primary email account from any spam that could be generated. You could also use this secondary account when posting to public mailing lists, social networking sites, blogs, and web forums. If the account start to fill up with spam, you can get rid of it and open a different one.
- Use privacy settings on social networking sites - Social networking sites typically allow you to choose who has access to see your email address. Consider hiding your email account or changing the settings so that only a small group of people that you trust are able to see your address (see Staying Safe on Social Network Sites for more information). Also, when you use applications on these sites, you may be granting permission for them to access your personal information. Be cautious about which applications you choose to use.
- Don't spam other people - Be a responsible and considerate user. Some people consider email forwards a type of spam, so be selective with the messages you redistribute. Don't forward every message to everyone in your address book, and if someone asks that you not forward messages to them, respect their request.

US-CERT Recognizing and Avoiding Email Scams

Recognizing and Avoiding Email Scams

US-CERT

Summary

Email provides us a convenient and powerful communications tool. Unfortunately, it also provides scammers and other malicious individuals an easy means for luring potential victims. The scams they attempt run from old-fashioned bait-and-switch operations to phishing schemes using a combination of email and bogus web sites to trick victims into divulging sensitive information. To protect yourself from these scams, you should understand what they are, what they look like, how they work, and what you can do to avoid them. The following recommendations can minimize your chances of falling victim to an email scam:

- Filter spam.
- Don't trust unsolicited email.
- Treat email attachments with caution.
- Don't click links in email messages.
- Install antivirus software and keep it up to date.
- Install a personal firewall and keep it up to date.
- Configure your email client for security.

These recommendations are explained in the section "What You Can Do to Avoid Becoming a Victim." Ignoring them may leave you vulnerable to identity theft, information theft, the abuse of your computer for illegal activity, the receipt of bogus or illegal merchandise, and financial loss.

Recognizing Email Scams

Unsolicited commercial email, or "spam," is the starting point for many email scams. Before the advent of email, a scammer had to contact each potential victim individually by post, fax, telephone, or through direct personal contact. These methods would often require a significant investment in time and money. To improve the chances of contacting susceptible victims, the scammer might have had to do advance research on the "marks" he or she targeted.

Email has changed the game for scammers. The convenience and anonymity of email, along with the capability it provides for easily contacting thousands of people at once, enables scammers to work in volume. Scammers only need to fool a small percentage of the tens of thousands of people they email for their ruse to pay off. For tips on reducing spam in your email in-box, see US-CERT Cyber Security Tip ST04-007, "Reducing Spam": <http://www.us-cert.gov/cas/tips/ST04-007.html>

The following sections provide information to help you spot an email scam when it lands in your mailbox. They describe some, but by no means all, of the many email-based scams you're likely to encounter. Armed with this information, you will better recognize email scams, even those not specifically mentioned here.

"Old-fashioned" Fraud Schemes

Many email scams have existed for a long time. In fact, a number of them are merely "recycled" scams that predate the use of email. The FTC has a list of the 12 most common (<http://www.ftc.gov/opa/1998/07/dozen.shtml>). The list includes

- bogus business opportunities
- chain letters
- work-at-home schemes
- health and diet scams
- easy money
- "free" goods
- investment opportunities
- bulk email schemes
- cable descrambler kits
- "guaranteed" loans or credit

The following sections describe some common fraud schemes initiated through email.

Bogus Business Opportunities

These scams promise the opportunity to make a great deal of money with very little effort. They're normally full of enticements such as "Work only hours a week," "Be your own boss," "Set your own hours," and "Work from home." The email messages offering these "opportunities" often have subject lines that look like the following:

- Make a Regular Income with Online Auctions
- Get Rich Click
- Put your computer to work for you!
- Use the Internet to make money
- eBay Insider Secrets Revealed 6228

In most cases, the email gives very little detail about the nature of the business opportunity. Most provide an address or web site from which you can, for a fee, obtain an "information kit" about the opportunity. These opportunities, however, usually amount to nothing more than pyramid schemes in which the "opportunity" involves your ability to recruit more unsuspecting people to buy into the scam. Eventually, the scam is uncovered or the pool of new recruits runs dry and it fails.

Health and Diet Scams

Health and diet scams prey on the insecurities some people have about the state of their well-being. These insecurities make some people particularly susceptible to the scams because they may be reluctant or embarrassed to discuss their problems with a doctor, or they can't afford to buy legitimate drugs or treatment. The scams attempt to lure consumers with promises of quick fixes and amazing results, discount pricing, fast delivery, waived prescription requirements, privacy, and discreet packaging. The email offering these items will have subject lines that look like the following:

- Need to lose weight for summer?
- Increase Your Sexual Performance Drastically
- CONTROL YOUR WEIGHT!!
- Natural Health Remedy That Works!
- Reduce body fat and build lean muscle without exercise
- Young at any age
- Takes years off your appearance
- Gives energy and burns fat

Though they may be backed by customer testimonials, beware: the products don't work.

Discount Software Offers

These scams frequently consist of advertisements for cheap versions of commercial software like Windows XP or Photoshop. The discounts offered may be hard to believe, and with good reason: the scammers either do not deliver the promised software at all, or provide illegal, pirated versions preloaded with Trojan horse software the scammer or other malicious individuals can use to exploit your computer and the information it contains.

419 Advanced Fee Fraud

These schemes are quite elaborate and despite their somewhat preposterous appearance manage to hook a surprising number of victims. Essentially, these scams attempt to entice the victim into a bogus plot to acquire and split a large sum of cash.

Many perpetrators of this kind of fraud have been Nigerian citizens. Consequently, the name "419 scheme" is taken from the section of the Nigerian penal code that addresses fraud.

419 scams are recognizable by their subject lines, which frequently call for an urgent response or refer to a personal introduction, and sender names, which are frequently (though not always) African or African inspired. Examples of senders and subject lines include those in the list below. You should note, however, that these examples are merely a few of the many thousands of variations of names, subject lines, or stories used in these scams.

Sender	Subject Line

A 419 advance fee fraud begins with an email that looks like this:

Date: Wednesday, August 24, 2008 5:55 PM -0700
From: "Mr. Henry Basseyy Udoma" <henrybasseyy_udoma@example.com.ar>
To: mrtarget@example.com
Subject: From: Henry (Regarding Dr. H. Paul Jacobi)

From: Henry (Regarding Dr. H. Paul Jacobi)

Hello,

I am sending you this private email to make a passionate appeal to you for assistance. Kindly accept my apology for contacting you this way and forgive me if this is not acceptable to you. My name is Henry Basseyy Udoma; I am an auditor at one of the Nigerian Banks. On Tuesday, 19 January, 2006, one Dr. H. Paul Jacobi a foreigner, made a numbered time (Fixed) Deposit, valued at £10,550,000.00 (Ten Million, Five Hundred and Fifty Thousand Pounds) for twelve calendar months in my Bank Branch.

Upon Maturity, we sent a routine notification to his forwarding address but got no reply. After a month, we sent a reminder and finally we discovered from his company that Dr. Paul A. Jacobi was aboard the Egypt Air Flight 990, which crashed into the Atlantic Ocean on October 31, 2006. After further investigation, it was discovered that he died without making a WILL and all attempts to trace his next of kin proved abortive....

These schemes work by getting the victim to take the initial bait, then slowly convincing him or her of the legitimacy of the plot through a series of forged documents, carefully crafted communications, and even visits by the victim to the country of origin for meetings with bogus "officials" in phony "government offices." At key junctures in the scam, the perpetrators will ask the victim to advance them money to pay bogus fees or bribes. Additionally, they may extract what amounts to an extortion payment by threatening to cut the victim out of the plot. Once the perpetrators believe they've gotten all they could from the victim, they cut off communication and vanish.

In short, if you discover an email in your inbox proposing a complicated arrangement to secure and split funds in a foreign land, you can safely assume someone is trying to ensnare you in a 419 scam.

Social Engineering/Phishing Email

Social engineering is a strategy for obtaining information people wouldn't normally divulge, or prompting an action people normally wouldn't perform, by preying on their natural curiosity and/or willingness to trust. Perpetrators of scams and other malicious individuals combine social engineering with email in a number of ways.

Phishing Email

Phishing emails are crafted to look as if they've been sent from a legitimate organization. These emails attempt to fool you into visiting a bogus web site to either download malware (viruses and other software intended to compromise your computer) or reveal sensitive personal information. The perpetrators of phishing scams carefully craft the bogus web site to look like the real thing.

For instance, an email can be crafted to look like it is from a major bank. It might have an alarming subject line, such as “Problem with Your Account.” The body of the message will claim there is a problem with your bank account and that, in order to validate your account, you must click a link included in the email and complete an online form.

The email is sent as spam to tens of thousands of recipients. Some, perhaps many, recipients are customers of the institution. Believing the email to be real, some of these recipients will click the link in the email without noticing that it takes them to a web address that only resembles the address of the real institution. If the email is sent and viewed as HTML, the visible link may be the URL of the institution, but the actual link information coded in the HTML will take the user to the bogus site. For example

visible link:	http://www.yourbank.com/accounts/
actual link to bogus site:	http://itcare.co.kr/data/yourbank/index.html

The bogus site will look astonishingly like the real thing, and will present an online form asking for information like your account number, your address, your online banking username and password—all the information an attacker needs to steal your identity and raid your bank account.

What to Look For

Bogus communications purporting to be from banks, credit card companies, and other financial institutions have been widely employed in phishing scams, as have emails from online auction and retail services. Carefully examine any email from your banks and other financial institutions. Most have instituted policies against asking for personal or account information in emails, so you should regard any email making such a request with extreme skepticism.

Phishing emails have also been disguised in a number of other ways. Some of the most common phishing emails include the following:

- fake communications from online payment and auction services, or from internet service providers – These emails claim there is a “problem” with your account and request that you access a (bogus) web page to provide personal and account information.
- fake accusation of violating Patriot Act – This email purports to be from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC). It says that the FDIC is refusing to ensure your account because of “suspected violations of the USA Patriot Act.” It requests you provide information through an online form to “verify your identity.” It’s really an attempt to steal your identity.
- fake communications from an IT Department – These emails will attempt to ferret passwords and other information phishers can use to penetrate your organization’s networks and computers.
- low-tech versions of any of the above asking you to fax back information on a printed form you can download from a (bogus) web site.

The Anti-Phishing Working Group maintains a helpful phishing archive. The archive catalogues reported phishing scams and presents not only the content of the phishing email, but also screen captures of the bogus web sites and URLs used in the scams. A review of several of the phishing scams catalogued in the archive can provide you insight into how these scams work and arm you with the information you need to avoid falling for them. You can find the Anti-Phishing Working Groups phishing archive at the following address:

http://www.antiphishing.org/phishing_archive/phishing_archive.html

Trojan Horse Email

Trojan horse email offers the promise of something you might be interested in—an attachment containing a joke, a photograph, or a patch for a software vulnerability. When opened, however, the attachment may do any or all of the following:

- create a security vulnerability on your computer
- open a secret “backdoor” to allow an attacker future illicit access to your computer
- install software that logs your keystrokes and sends the logs to an attacker, allowing the attacker to ferret out your passwords and other important information
- install software that monitors your online transactions and activities
- provide an attacker access to your files
- turn your computer into a “bot” an attacker can use to send spam, launch denial-of-service attacks, or spread the virus to other computers

What to Look For

Trojan horse emails have come in a variety of packages over the years. One of the most notorious was the “Love Bug” virus, attached to an email with the subject line “I Love You” and which asked the recipient to view the attached “love letter.” Other Trojan horse emails have included the following:

- email posing as virtual postcard
- email masquerading as security bulletin from a software vendor requesting the recipient apply an attached “patch”
- email with the subject line “funny” encouraging the recipient to view the attached “joke”
- email claiming to be from an antivirus vendor encouraging the recipient to install the attached “virus sweeper” free of charge

Virus-Generated Email

Note that, in some cases, a familiar “from” address does not ensure safety: Many viruses spread by first searching for all email addresses on an infected computer and then sending themselves to these addresses. So, if your friend's computer has become infected with such a virus, you could receive an email that may, in fact, come from your friend's computer but which was not actually authored by your friend. If you have any doubts, verify the message with the person you believe to be the sender before opening any email attachment.

What You Can Do to Avoid Becoming a Victim

Filter Spam

Because most email scams begin with unsolicited commercial email, you should take measures to prevent spam from getting into your mailbox. Most email applications and web mail services include spam-filtering features, or ways in which you can configure your email applications to filter spam. Consult the help file for your email application or service to find out what you must do to filter spam.

You may not be able to eliminate all spam, but filtering will keep a great deal of it from reaching your mailbox. You should be aware that spammers monitor spam filtering tools and software and take measures to elude them. For instance, spammers may use subtle spelling mistakes to subvert spam filters, changing "Potency Pills" to "Potençy Pills."

Regard Unsolicited Email with Suspicion

Don't automatically trust any email sent to you by an unknown individual or organization. Never open an attachment to unsolicited email. Most importantly, never click on a link sent to you in an email. Cleverly crafted links can take you to forged web sites set up to trick you into divulging private information or downloading viruses, spyware, and other malicious software.

Spammers may also use a technique in which they send unique links in each individual spam email. Victim 1 may receive an email with the link <<http://dfnasdunf.example.org/>>, and victim 2 may receive the same spam email with the link <<http://vnbnnasd.exaple.org/>>. By watching which links are requested on their web servers, spammers can figure out which email addresses are valid and more precisely target victims for repeat spam attempts.

Remember that even email sent from a familiar address may create problems: Many viruses spread themselves by scanning the victim computer for email addresses and sending themselves to these addresses in the guise of an email from the owner of the infected computer.

Treat Email Attachments with Caution

Email attachments are commonly used by online scammers to sneak a virus onto your computer. These viruses can help the scammer steal important information from your computer, compromise your computer so that it is open to further attack and abuse, and convert your computer into a 'bot' for use in denial-of-service attacks and other online crimes. As noted above, a familiar “from” address is no guarantee of safety because some viruses spread by first searching for all email addresses on an infected computer and then sending itself to these addresses. It could be your friend’s computer is infected with just such a virus.

Use Common Sense

When email arrives in your mailbox promising you big money for little effort, accusing you of violating the Patriot Act, or inviting you to join a plot to grab unclaimed funds involving persons you don’t know in a country on the other side of the world, take a moment to consider the likelihood that the email is legitimate.

Install Antivirus Software and Keep it Up to Date

If you haven’t done so by now, you should install antivirus software on your computer. If possible, you should install an antivirus program that has an automatic update feature. This will help ensure you always have the most up-to-date protection possible against viruses. In addition, you should make sure the antivirus software you choose includes an email scanning feature. This will help keep your computer free of email-born viruses.

Install a Personal Firewall and Keep it Up to Date

A firewall will not prevent scam email from making its way into your mailbox. However, it may help protect you should you inadvertently open a virus-bearing attachment or otherwise introduce malware to your computer by following the instructions in the email. The firewall, among other things, will help prevent outbound traffic from your computer to the attacker. When your personal firewall detects suspicious outbound communications from your computer, it could be a sign you have inadvertently installed malicious programs on your computer.

Learn the Email Policies of the Organizations You Do Business With

Most organizations doing business online now have clear policies about how they communicate with their customers in email. Many, for instance, will not ask you to provide account or personal information via email. Understanding the policies of the organizations you do business with can help you spot and avoid phishing and other scams. Do note, however, that it’s never a good idea to send sensitive information via unencrypted email.

Configure Your Email Client for Security

There are a number of ways you can configure your email client to make you less susceptible to email scams. For instance, configuring your email program to view email as “text only” will help protect you from scams that misuse HTML in email.

Policy Requirements for Sending Email to AOL

Aol Postmaster.

Technical and Policy Requirements for Sending Email to AOL

Failure to meet these requirements will result in reduced delivery of your mail. We also have a best practices document for email senders.

Technical Requirements

- All email must be RFC compliant. (Refer to RFC 2821 & RFC 2822)
- All email servers connecting to AOL's mail servers must have valid, meaningful, non-generic reverse DNS records.
Examples:
 - Good RDNS: mail.domain.com
 - Generic RDNS: 1.2.3.3.domain.isp.com
- All e-mail servers connecting to AOL's mail servers must be secured to prevent unauthorized or anonymous use. Ensure your mail server is not an open proxy or an open relay.
- Ensure all forms on your web server are secure. If you use formmail scripts, ensure they cannot be used to send spam.
- Direct connections from dynamically assigned/residential customer IP addresses to AOL's mail servers may not be accepted.
- Organizations may not hard code AOL's mx records into their configuration files.

Policy Requirements

- Any email sent to AOL members must conform to AOL Legal's Community Guidelines.
- All commercial email must be CAN-SPAM compliant.
- All subscription based e-mail must have valid, non-electronic, contact information for the sending organization in the text of each e-mail including phone number and a physical mailing address.
- Bulk mailings should contain simple and obvious unsubscribe mechanisms. We recommend that this be in the form of a working link to a one-click unsubscribe system.
- Email senders must not do anything that tries to hide, forge or misrepresent the sender of the e-mail and sending site of the e-mail.
- Opt-in information, including how an email address was obtained, the date/time of opt-in, and the IP address the user opted in from must be made available on request.
- Entities sending subscription-based mail must remove any email address which generates any of the following error codes:
 - 550 "username" Is Not Accepting Mail From This Sender
 - 550 Mailbox not found
 - 550 We would love to have gotten this email to example_user@aim.com. But, your recipient never logged onto their free AIM Mail account. Please contact them and let them know that they're missing out on all the super features offered by AIM Mail. And by the way, they're also missing out

A complete list of AOL error codes can be found here.

- Member complaints, bounces, invalid recipients, failure to accept bounces, and spam trap hits all contribute to a sender's reputation. Any sender with a poor reputation may be automatically removed from the AOL whitelist. A pattern of such abuses common to a single organization may result in the revocation of whitelist status for some or all of that organization's IP Addresses. For tips on improving your reputation, check out our best practices document for email senders.
- AOL may remove an IP from the whitelist without notice for violation of any of these technical or policy requirements.

HTML In Email

HTML e-mail is used to bring life to e-mail communications. Originally, e-mails were restricted to plain text; now, new e-mail programs allow users to see more vibrant and dynamic content. These e-mails can now include colors, links, and images, making them as attractive and visually stimulating as web pages.

HTML e-mails are created by including HTML tags into the body of the e-mail and then inserting a special MIME type that tells the program to render the content according to HTML rules. It's important to include the MIME type; without it, the e-mail is displayed in plain text only, and the HTML tags become visible to the reader.

MIME stands for Multipurpose Internet Mail Extensions. MIME types are used to send non-ASCII information, and this is what allows e-mail programs to realize that it's an image instead of a garbled series of characters.

MIME types are specified in the header of the e-mail, which is where the program also finds the "To", "From", and other display or encoding information. Typically, when an e-mail is sent, it includes the line

Content-Type: text/plain

This notifies the program that a plain text e-mail has been received. To send HTML e-mail, the Content-Type should be modified. Depending on the situation, one of the following will be used:

Content-Type: text/html

Content-Type: text/x-aol

Most HTML e-mail capable programs understand the first Content-Type, including AOL 6.0. Older versions of AOL, however, require the second Content-Type to be used.

Does an e-mail program support everything? Not at all. These e-mail programs are often only able to do a simplified amount of rendering. They certainly are not able to perform on the level of your average Internet Explorer or Netscape browser.

One reason is because of the security hazards involved with sending HTML e-mails. These e-mails can expose the unwary user to hostile viruses or other intrusive programs. Starting with the AOL 6.0 client, the e-mail program will render nearly all HTML tags but will exclude several pieces of functionality typically found on websites.

- Scripts (e.g., JavaScript, VBScript)

- Java
- Frames and IFrames
- Tooltips
- Active X
- Video
- Audio
- External Style Sheets
- Meta Refresh

The common theme here is end-user security. Malicious e-mailers can bury a wide variety of harmful actions within the HTML e-mail, including programs that activate upon download. Also, as is the case with Meta Refresh, a user can be sent to another web site automatically. It is important to AOL that the end-user be protected from these potential security hazards.

On AOL clients older than 6.0, the MIME header should be MIME/X-AOL. This allows the e-mail to be translated using AOL's Rich Text Format. RTF is not as full featured as what is available from AOL 6. HTML tags that are not supported by RTF will be displayed as plain text. Additionally, no tables are supported. Users should be careful to only use the following tags when sending HTML e-mail to clients older than AOL 6.

FONT:     FONT
ITALICS:  I
UNDERLINE: U
SUBSCRIPT: SUB
SUPERSCRIPT: SUP
BIG:     BIG
SMALL:   SMALL
HEADER:  H1, H2, H3
PARAGRAPH: P
BODY:    BODY
HYPERLINK: A
CENTER:  CENTER

AOL Unsolicited Bulk E-mail Policy

America Online, Inc. ("AOL") does not authorize the use of its proprietary computers and computer network (the AOL Network") to accept, transmit or distribute unsolicited bulk e-mail sent from the Internet to AOL members. In addition, Internet e-mail sent, or caused to be sent, to or through the AOL Network that makes use of or contains invalid or forged headers, invalid or non-existent domain names or other means of deceptive addressing will be deemed to be counterfeit. Any attempt to send or cause such counterfeit e-mail to be sent to or through the AOL Network is unauthorized. Similarly, e-mail that is relayed from any third party's mail servers without the permission of that third party, or which employs similar techniques to hide or obscure the source of the e-mail, is also an unauthorized use of the AOL Network. AOL does not authorize anyone to send e-mail or cause e-mail to be sent to the AOL Network that violates AOL's Terms of Service. AOL does not authorize the harvesting or collection of screen names from the AOL service for the purpose of sending unsolicited e-mail. AOL reserves the right to take all legal and technical steps available to prevent unsolicited bulk e-mail or other unauthorized e-mail from entering, utilizing or remaining within the AOL Network. Nothing in this policy is intended to grant any right to transmit or send e-mail to, or through, the AOL Network. AOL's failure to enforce this policy in every instance in which it might have application does not amount to a waiver of AOL's rights.

Unauthorized use of the AOL Network in connection with the transmission of unsolicited bulk e-mail, including the transmission of counterfeit e-mail, may result in civil and criminal penalties against the sender, including those provided by the Computer Fraud and Abuse Act (18 U.S.C. 1030 et seq.) Civil and criminal penalties may also apply to e-mail transmitted to the AOL Network in violation of the CAN-SPAM Act of 2003.
